Chapter 1 by Gn4rledNe0n

Ryan paced nervously in front his rental car. If everything worked fine, the plan should go off without a hitch. If something did go wrong, he was not going to be seen for a while. He looked at his watch and had a nervous breakdown before throwing himself into his car and speeding down the street. He was flying down the street, weaving his way through the cars. 9:30 he thought. It was supposed to be there at 9:20! He swerved, nearly hitting an elderly man who was walking and parked in front of the dry cleaners. He jumped out of his car, grabbed his suitcase, adjusted his tie, and walked in as professional as he could.

"There you are!" his comrade in crime, Ricky, said as he pushed his seat back and walked over to him. "How are you, friend?" he asked, his voice confident.

"I'm good," Ryan replied, his eyes on the other men sitting around the table.
